Counsel and Client,

I write regarding communications directed to third parties about me and/or my published disability-rights work, including a recent request to the American Bar Association that my article be removed based on personal attacks rather than the substance of the publication.

Regardless of motive, contacting third parties to pressure removal of publications, employment/academic consequences, or other collateral harm—particularly where the contact is tied to my assertion of disability rights or court-access rights—raises serious concerns under federal and state law, including interference/retaliation concepts.

Accordingly:

1. Cease and desist (third-party interference).

Please refrain from contacting third parties (including publishers, professional organizations, academic institutions, employers, donors, collaborators, or media) for the purpose of urging adverse action against me based on my litigation history, disability, accommodation requests, or protected advocacy.

2. Preservation of evidence.

Please preserve all documents and electronically stored information relating to any such third-party contact(s), including but not limited to emails, letters, texts, phone logs, call notes, drafts, attachments, and communications with any person at the ABA (or any other institution) regarding removal of my work or reputational allegations about me. This preservation request applies to counsel, client, staff, agents, and any third parties acting at your direction.

3. Channel for any legitimate concerns.

If you believe any statement in a publication is factually inaccurate or defamatory, direct any concerns to me in writing so they can be addressed on the merits, rather than through third-party pressure.

This notice is sent in good faith to prevent unnecessary collateral disputes and to give you an opportunity to correct course. If third-party interference continues after this notice, I will treat it as intentional and will consider requesting appropriate relief and sanctions in the relevant forum(s), as well as any other remedies available.

Sincerely,

Kathryn "Katie" Copeland
