Patient Name: Kathryn Copeland DOB: June 28, 1985

Date: December 8, 2025

Provider Name & Credentials: Isabel Huang, M.D., Associate Professor in the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at UT Southwestern.

Facility: UT Southwestern Medical Center 5303 Harry Hines Blvd, 5th Floor, Suite 101 Dallas, TX 75390

To Whom It May Concern, I am writing this statement in support of my patient, Kathryn Copeland, who has been under my care at UT Southwestern Medical Center since October 8, 2024, for the management of multiple severe chronic illnesses, including Hypermobility Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome (hEDS), Histamine overload, and Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS). These conditions, significantly impair her daily functioning and her reported ability to participate in legal proceedings without accommodations.

Current Health Challenges Since my last statement on September 10, 2025, Ms. Copeland's health has continued to decline. On December 4, 2025, she attended a court hearing in person, and the physical strain and environmental exposure reportedly triggered a severe flare-up that has significantly worsened her symptoms of pain, weakness, and fatigue.

Reportedly per Ms. Copeland, she discovered in late October 2025 that a protocol issued on September 8, 2025, had declared all of her belongings contaminated with Chaetomium, a toxic mold. Despite her requests for this information to address her medical treatment needs, the protocol was concealed from her until late October. On September 22, 2025, all of Ms. Copeland's possessions, including essential medical supplies that had been helping her condition, were taken and handed over to unlicensed mold remediation personnel. These items have not been returned or cleaned, leaving Ms. Copeland without access to critical medical equipment and supplies necessary for managing her health and in the past has helped her condition.

Given her severe sensitivities to environmental triggers, including mold, it is my professional opinion that all of her contaminated belongings must be replaced to ensure her safety and prevent further health deterioration.

Ms. Copeland is currently reporting the following:

- Persistent fatigue and post-exertional malaise: Ms. Copeland is often bedridden for extended periods, unable to perform basic tasks or care for herself.
- Severe systemic inflammation: Chronic inflammation exacerbates her pain and fatigue, further impairing her ability to recover.
- Orthostatic intolerance, dizziness, tremors, and frequent migraines: These symptoms make it difficult for Ms. Copeland to sit or stand for extended periods, limiting her ability to attend court hearings or participate in legal proceedings.
- Neurological and sensory issues: Ms. Copeland experiences visual disturbances, light sensitivity, and cognitive dysfunction, including impaired memory, slowed processing, and executive dysfunction, which significantly impact her ability to focus and respond to legal matters.
- Severe gastrointestinal impairment: Ongoing nutritional instability and weight loss due to gastrointestinal distress further compromise her physical health and energy levels.
- Immune dysfunction and flare-ups: which can be noted with histamine overload

These episodes are characterized by systemic inflammation, fatigue, and gastrointestinal distress, leaving her unable to function for days at a time. I

The removal of her possessions, including essential medical supplies, on September 22, 2025, has left her without access to critical items necessary for managing her health. These items have not been returned or cleaned, and given Ms. Copeland's severe sensitivities to environmental triggers, including 3 mold, it is my professional opinion that all of her contaminated belongings must be replaced to ensure her safety and prevent further health deterioration.

Exposure to environmental triggers during court appearances, such as allergens, stress, and physical exertion, can significantly worsen Ms. Copeland's immunerelated symptoms as she reports that she is currently in a flare. These include histamine overload, systemic inflammation, and severe fatigue, which further compromise her health and ability to participate in legal proceedings. Without immediate accommodations, Ms. Copeland's health could continue to deteriorate, preventing her from recovering and participating effectively in her case.

Necessary Accommodations To stabilize Ms. Copeland's health and ensure her ability to participate in legal proceedings, I strongly recommend the following accommodations:

Remote Attendance: Ms. Copeland's severe physical limitations, immune dysfunction, and sensitivities to environmental triggers make attending court hearings in person difficult to manage. Remote attendance would allow her to participate without exposure to germs, allergens, and physical strain, which are known to exacerbate her symptoms.

2. Extended Deadlines: Due to the unpredictable nature of Ms. Copeland's flare-ups, extended time to respond to deadlines is essential. These flare-ups often leave her unable to function for days at a time, making it impossible for her to meet strict deadlines without accommodations.

3. Safe Housing: Ms. Copeland requires immediate access to safe housing that is clean and free from environmental triggers, such as mold and allergens. Stable housing is critical for her recovery and for resuming prescribed therapies and personal care services, which are essential for managing her health.

4. Replacement of Contaminated Belongings: Ms. Copeland's belongings, including essential medical supplies, were reportedly removed and given to unlicensed mold remediation personnel on September 22, 2025, and have not been returned or cleaned. Given her severe sensitivities to mold and other environmental triggers, it is my professional opinion that all contaminated belongings must be replaced to ensure her safety and prevent further health deterioration.

5. Access to Essential Items: o Ms. Copeland requires access to specific items to manage her health and stabilize her condition, including: An air purifier to reduce exposure to allergens and irritants. An adjustable bed to support her joints and manage pain during extended periods of rest which she previously owned. Heat therapy and infrared therapy devices to alleviate chronic pain and improve circulation. Hydrotherapy equipment to manage joint pain and improve mobility. Meal assistance or access to meal delivery services to ensure proper nutrition during periods of fatigue and pain. These accommodations are medically necessary to stabilize Ms. Copeland's health, prevent further deterioration, and ensure her ability to participate effectively in legal proceedings. Thank you for your attention to this urgent matter.

Sincerely,
Isabel S Huang, MD
